Designer Donald Healey at the wheel of the new 100-Six in Nassau

SETTING THE PACE FOR '57

The Austin-Healey now holds every International Class D record from one to three thousand miles

Sleek lines, striking color combinations, convenient jump seat and luxurious interior features are the obvious part of the new 100-Six.

The inside story is its terrific performance in competition and on the road. This new Austin-Healey's big, trigger-fast six-cylinder power plant delivers acceleration and cruising speed to burn.

Add extra large brakes, superb cornering ability and rugged body construction and you have the 100-Six... the pacemaker in medium priced sports cars. See it! Test drive it today!

Lesson from Lombard Street

It's a pity every city doesn't have a piece of pavement like San Francisco's notorious Lombard Street hill. Take a Corvette down that brick serpentine and—in one block—you've learned there's a whole new world of motoring that you've never touched before.

It's the sports car world—the world of precision driving where your car becomes an extension of yourself, answering the flick of fingers, the tap of a toe with a crisp accuracy that larger, bulkier cars can't equal.

It's a world in which every mile is a reward, not a chore—because no other kind of car gives you the kind of mind-reading obedience, the sense of solidity and security through curves, the instantaneous sprinter's response.

If you like driving for its own sake, this is your kind of world—and, in America, Corvette is your kind of car. For Corvette is the only real sports car made in this country—the only one that marries rock-solid roadability to the husky wallop of Chevrolet's remarkable V8 engine.

Corvette comes with all sorts of options—fuel injection, four-speed all-Synchro-Mesh transmission, limited-slip rear axle, even Powerglide* to ease the chore of traffic driving. So, even if you don't have a Lombard Street handy, drop in on your Chevrolet dealer—you've got a wonderful lesson to learn.... Chevrolet Division of General Motors, Detroit 2, Mich. *All optional at extra cost.
