This is the way it's going to be, baby.

(We take the fun of driving seriously.)

The Humbler.

Starting now, a lot of pseudo performers will be wishing they could slither off to a nice, quiet garage.

The 1970 Pontiac GTO's in town. New. Down-right dazzling. So we've thrown modesty to the wind and dubbed it "The Humbler."

You'll get the message when you hear the new, low-restriction, performance exhaust you can order. Kind of like a 30-inch woofer having a field day with a grumbling bass sax.

Of course, those pipes can't make with the vibrations on their own. There's got to be something more than a windup putt-putt up front. Well, The Humbler's standard is a 400-cube V-8. But what if you order the new 455 V-8? Or one of the Ram Air engines? (370 horses in the Ram Air IV.)

And what if you specify the Hurst-stirred 4-speed, instead of the standard 3-speed?

OK. Everybody's impressed, except a few die-hards. So we'll point out that those big, black, fiberglass-belted boots are not there to polish the pavement. When they get hold of a hunk of road, they hold. And The Humbler's got two new stabilizer bars, front and rear, just to be sure they do.

Now about that nice, quiet garage. We couldn't think of a cozier place for a bunch of performance upstarts to eat their humble pie. And obviously, dessert is served.

This is The Humbler.

COVER: Engine sizes have pretty well held the line the last few years, and everyone has been busy trying to extract as much horsepower as possible out of them. It looks as if 1970 is the year for "big" things, and Chevrolet is introducing their new 454 Turbo Jet model. To see what you will have as a base for the horsepower search, see story on page 46.
